

I believe that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections.

Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has improved my family's quality time at home by eliminating virtually all telemarketing calls. "I used to receive 5 calls per night, and now I receive virtually none

I believe in state's rights on this matter, however I also believe that the federal government has a right to establish and implement a national policy, but have it as a minimum level of protection. Should a state policy be more rigorous than the federal policy, please allow that to supersede.

--Any of your personal views about the importance of Indiana's law.